

Young Organic Leader | Rachel Davis Eco-Farms, Carole Park, Queensland

Packing organic fruit and vegetables at the Brisbane Markets on weekends and school holidays as a teenager provided the start of an exciting career for Young Organic Leader of the Year Award winner, Rachel Davis.

Now working as Sales and Development Manager for Eco-Farms, a market leading company selling a diverse range of certified organic foods domestically and overseas, Rachel said she was proud to gain formal recognition for her contribution to the organic industry.

“I was absolutely chuffed to win the Young Organic Leader Award, especially when all the finalists have made important contributions to the industry and are worthy of winning the Award,” said Ms Davis.

With a lifetime passion for Australian agriculture, and a keen interest in AgTech, Rachel said she is a very vocal advocate for the organic horticulture industry.

“Over the years I have held a position on the National Standards Sub-Committee and contributed to the Australian Organic Industry Working Group, which helped result in Australian Organic Limited being recognised as the peak industry body,” she said.

“At the moment, I serve as a committee member on Australian Organic Limited’s Horticulture Advisory Committee and on the Queensland Division for Ag Institute Australia.

“All of these roles have only been possible with the support and backing of Eco-Farms.

“I get a lot of energy from belonging to an important industry that has less impact on the environment and that promotes ethical and sustainable farming methods.”

Learn more about Eco-Farms here.